

Jack Robertson

Jack Robertson is Vice President of Development for Lennar Urban's San Francisco office where he oversees residential design and construction activities at the Hunters Point Shipyard and Treasure Island master-planned waterfront communities. Mr. Robertson has almost 30 years of experience in acquiring, financing and building real estate throughout the West Coast, Southwest and Eastern United States. Mr. Robertson's experience bridges both the public and private sectors resulting from his work as both a developer and former local redevelopment official. In addition to his current focus with Lennar Urban, Mr. Robertson previously developed and renovated over 4,000 residential homes and ancillary commercial uses, totaling over $600 million. Jack is a Bay Area native and received his bachelor degree in Urban Planning and Development from the University of California at Berkeley and obtained a Master of Public Policy from Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government. Currently, Mr. Robertson also serves as a Planning Commissioner for the City of San Rafael.