THE PORT

The Port of Redwood City, located midway between San Francisco and San Jose, is an enterprise department of the City of Redwood City and is governed by an appointed five-member Board of Port Commissioners which meets bi-monthly. The Port is a financially self-sufficient enterprise department of the City without general fund or tax support.

THE POSITION

Reporting to a five-member Port Commission that is appointed by the City Council of Redwood City, the Executive Director of the Port is responsible for leading the Port to meet its strategic, financial, operational, and environmental goals. Along with the Commissioners, the Executive Director serves as a face of the Port to the community. This position maintains complete responsibility and authority for the administration of all port-related activities. The Executive Director oversees the implementation and administration of Port Commission established policies. The position has responsibility for maintaining excellent working relationships between the Port and all local, regional, state and federal agencies, offices and representatives, as well as maritime associations.

POSITION RESPONSIBILITIES

The Executive Director's primary accountabilities include: overseeing the development of capital and operating budgets; performing the full range of managerial oversight functions; providing consistent delivery of high quality and cost effective administrative services; preparing, negotiating and administering all leases, agreements and contracts; providing executive oversight for long-range strategic planning processes; promoting and encouraging the active oversight and participation of the Commission; working closely with the Commission to increase public awareness and support for the Port; remaining current and engaged with the local and regional political landscape; maintaining relationships with Port customers and representing the Port to elected officials and outside agencies.
